A salutary return to the roots.

He's a senior executive living between Paris, New York, and London. His only experience with the countryside is a day spent picking blackberries and riding a bike down the Breton coast. But he's had enough. His life is hollow and false. He sets out to seek truth and authenticity somewhere else.
She's his new neighbour, a beekeeper. To her, he's a bit of a Martian, and not terribly friendly or smart.
Between quarrels, tantrums, and mutual attraction, these two slowly but surely edge towards a love story despite getting off on the wrong foot.
