Conceiving a philosophy of hospitality at a time of unprecedented migratory crisis.

Humankind is undergoing a disaster: Europe has become "criminal," rolling out immigration policies, absurd as they are cruel, that leave thousands of people to die in general indifference. These hostile policies contradict the initiatives of men and women everywhere who host exiles with no conditions on their hospitality, eventually establishing networks of mutual support. This is a philosophical and political essay deeply rooted in the real world: its authors have been involved in migrant welfare for several years.
