The man who would be king.

This is the tragic story of the Mapuche Indians who dwelled in the regions of Araucania and Patagonia in the 1860s, when the armies of Argentina and Chile moved to seize their lands. It is the story of one man, Antoine de Tounens, a modest French lawyer who set out for Chile with a single idea in mind: to become King Orélie-Antoine I. He went on to found the independent kingdom of Mapuche in order to fight colonization.
