All it took was a phone call. She had been happy. Their love had been the most important thing in the world to her. Until the day she discovered that her husband was leading two lives.

A writer and war reporter, she finds herself drowning in a very different kind of pain, the pain of betrayal. Devastated by this unbearable lie, she loses all sense of self, almost going insane. Now it is her turn to lie. She observes the traitor without saying a word. She lives with him, puts up with his looks, the weight and warmth of his body. Until she gets her revenge.
