Cartooning for Peace, an international network of over 160 editorial cartoonists, uses humor to fight for freedom and cultural respect.

Even today, women's rights are too often challenged or ignored. Élisabeth Badinter reminds us that, though there have been a few shake-ups recently, women still have a long way to go before their rights are respected. Selected by Cartooning for Peace, these 60 editorial cartoons from around the world paint a portrait of the injustices and violence women face every day, whether in education, sexuality, work, or religion.
