The internet has changed our world, but do we know how much it has changed human existence? Maël Renouard tries to answer this question in a journal kept by a moralist on the repercussions of the Internet, of Google, essentially on his relationship to knowledge, to others, and to living.

The Internet has changed our world. But do we really know the extent to which it has changed human existence? Maël Renouard tries to answer in philosophical and literary form by sharing his experience of a life spent on the Internet. The result is a series of fragments, thoughts, maxims, and a goldmine of stories. In a word, a unique work that tries to better make sense of contemporary life.
