An illustrated nonfiction book with information and activities for learning about biodiversity in an active way that fosters creativity!

Whether you're a city mouse or a field mouse, take a moment and visit the countryside. This book celebrates the precious role animals play in gardens, the beauty of weeks, and the bounty of fruit trees. Winter, spring, summer, or fall, there's always something to make or do: an insect hotel to build, a basket of vegetables to grow, or an herbarium to assemble.

The series "Hands-on Nature," teaches children to interact with the living world with wonder and respect. With its bright illustrations, valuable tips, and DIY activities arranged by season, readers will discover biodiversity while expressing themselves creatively.
