Through numerous interviews, this work invites readers to explore new forms of organization and solidarity.

From blockades and occupations to Palestine, climate marches in New York to refugee camps in La Chapelle to London airport tarmacs, anti-globalization activist Juliette Rousseau, coordinator of the Coalition against COP 21 in 2015, sets out to interview collectives hard at work in today's society, leading the fight against unfair power relations linked to class, gender, race, and even physical and mental conditions. Collectives that are questioning the way we live and the ways we reproduce these selfsame power imbalances within activist domains.
