The metaphors fly fast and furious in this fable about the abuses of power set in a school playground!

"I am the king--King Jacadi! And you, all of you are my beloved subjects. Bow before me!" When a boy proclaims himself king, the other children gladly take part in the game: happily obeying, building a palace with buckets of sand, becoming courtiers or soldiers. But the king soon becomes a tyrant, and his subjects are divided--not everyone wants to give up their snack to the king! Revolution is in the air. The king declares war while the rest of the children start singing and mocking him. Jacadi isn't having any of that! Off to prison with them all! But suddenly, he finds himself all alone...
