A dignified, deeply moving story to help parents talk with their children about the very current topic of migrants.

“My name is Talia. I am seven years old, and I have already traveled a very long way. I used to live in a big city in Sudan, in Africa. There was trouble in our country so we had to leave. I don’t know what happened, but suddenly we had to leave. Right away.”

A young Sudanese girl is forced to flee with her family and migrate in search of a new home. Driven from the shores of Africa to a camp in northern France, she will experience fear, worry and then, one day, hope for a better future.
