Animals have rights too! First and foremost: the right to be respected by human beings. Endorsed by French animal rights group L214 upon publication.

Prehistoric humans sought to protect themselves from animals. Then, over time, humans seized control of the animal kingdom, domesticating some species and decimating others. But animals have rights too! First and foremost: the right to be respected by human beings. This new way of thinking is bringing about major changes in the relationship between animals and people. Ethologists studying animal behaviour have proved that animals are sensitive creatures. Yet numerous species are under threat. Pressured by various groups and organisations, governments are starting to put protective measures in place, but we still have a long way to go!
