A dog meets a boy and decides to adopt him. Even if they don't understand each other, it's the beginning of a special friendship!

It's hard to understand a dog when all he says is "blah blah blah." That's why the little boy who runs into him several times, however intrigued, ends up trying to forget the dog with a house on his head. But one day, the little house shows up near his bed, just like the dog, who emerges from the closet. Child and animal, finally speaking the same language, become fast friends. A story that shows you don't always need words to make your feelings understood. Children will find the simple writing accessible and enjoy the refrain of "blah blah blah" throughout the book.
