Can science still save the world?

That's the question Robin Cousin asked researchers while on residency at the University of Poitiers in 2019. Their answers revealed just what the human sciences bring to scientific research, and the importance of funding. Cousin fictionalized his experience, featuring the characters from his previous book, Des milliards de miroirs [Billions of Mirrors], as students.

An apocalypse-themed end-of-the-year party will see an exchange of hypothetical (but highly political) idea about how best to put radical solutions into practice and make a clean break with "short-terminism" and utilitarianism. An ardent plea in favor of undirected research.
