To reason or to resonate?

With "resonance," Hartmut Rosa introduces a new concept to remedy monopolistic and speculationist capitalism's hegemonic and reifying tendency toward acceleration, which dooms us to growth and overload. For Rosa, there will be no meaningful social change unless we enter into a new relationship with the world: a "responsive" relationship. But what would such "resonance" concretely consist of? And most importantly, how can it help younger generations live with the realities of the Anthropocene, which are becoming clearer every day?
