Three legends from around the world gathered to illustrate a vital element in danger: Water.

What happens when the King of Mexico becomes obsessed with filling his swimming pool with water from a nearby stream? When a shepherdess discovers the secret of the mysterious spring of sheep? When little Nyano starts talking with freshwater fish? A nonfiction appendix to these legends and folktales explains how we can and why we should protect the great gift our planet has given us: water. Also available in the same series: Earth.
