Nonfiction focusing on the important topics children can see in the news, to help them understand and grasp all the issues at stake.

Habitat destruction, pollution, global warming: a million living species are now threatened with extinction, from insects to large mammals, birds, and even plants! Biodiversity – which in the 1980s was being studied by just a handful of researchers – has become an essential topic in today's society and a major challenge for politicians to take up in the years to come.
