Alain Serres, Director

"A sprightly, feel-good daydream of worldwide disarmament that addresses our universal need to talk to our children about war, and even more importantly, peace."

With a playful tone, this book thumbs its nose at war and silences cannons, all while encouraging kids to raise monuments to life in town squares and city plazas. The object of the game is to catch a tank in its sleep and tie a knot in its big cannon. Sound hard? It's not! At children's fingertips, iron bends as easily as chewing gum! This book contains multiple versions of the same story in languages from all over the world. Across these pages, Bruno Heitz has little tin soldiers waltzing in and out of children's hands until a final banner proclaims: "General Disarmament of the Earth and All the Stars!"
