Florence Pariente, Foreign Rights Manager:

"A new talent in children's books: Mélanie Kochert style is charmingly naive. The parents' ways to prepare the arrival of the baby are not stereotyped: mummy paints the walls, dad makes jam, while tenderly imagining how this baby they can't wait to meet will be."

While waiting for Arthur's birth, Daddy Bear makes jam and Mummy Bear paints the walls.

What is happening in Arthur's lovely hut? The mother-to-be repaints all walls. She is dreaming: her little one will be an artist. His dad is making jam. His child will be a food lover for sure. And Arthur? His birth can't be far off... and he will grow up at full speed! Will he be like his parents imagined him to be? Maybe, but nothing is less certain.

A tender book dealing with parents' expectations, in which the activities of the parents-to-be are not stereotyped.
