This illustrated work explains and demystifies social media for children ages 8-13, with a view to better understanding current issues.

Family, friendly, and professional ties: since the 2000s, the development of social media has upset the bonds between people, popularizing a new mode of communication. But behind this great social progress also lie many challenges to be taken up, to make social networks safer and more trustworthy platforms for citizens.

Developed by the children's magazine Albert, "Future Worlds" is a series of illustrated nonfiction works that focus on important themes children can see in 21st century news.
