Léonora Miano holds up a mirror to society that has grown clouded, polishing it with her fierce insight.

Everything is going so well for black women in today's France. Everything, that is, except relations with members of the male gender in the workplace, not to mention muted tensions with female coworkers. Why aren't things working out, and why aren't they about to get better? Léonora Miano dedicates her first play to the black presence in France today.
