What were French women really doing during World War II?

Along this winding journey we will meet women from various backgrounds whose trajectories have been marked and shaped by ideals, constraints, hopes sometimes dashed and often tenacious beliefs. But almost always, they have been guided by a simple idea: service. What did they do? How did they organize? What were their goals? How did they stand out? What did they wear? Explore the uniformed civilians' side of the Second World War: nurses; drivers; social workers; the women of relief agencies, associations, state organizations, and even collaborationist groups.
