Ecofeminism in 60 firsthand accounts: sisterhood, social and climate justice, leadership, spirituality, environmentalism, a caring society, decolonization...

For a few years now, ecofeminism has gradually been taking hold in the wake of social and environmental upheavals. Led by politically active women and men, the movement is at the center of current events. Ducrétot and Jehan tap into this very energy in this book, opening new horizons. They've gathered over 60 contributors who draw on their own reflections and experiences to speak to the diversity of ecofeminist practices and ways of taking action together to change our relationship to the world.
