The story of a little girl sitting in the kitchen in front of a book.

A little girl gets lost in daydreams, her mind wandering off, until she's drifted so far away that her imagination has created another world around her from tiny cues in the real one. With poetry and utter clarity, Frédérique Bertrand illustrates this scattered mental state of dilution and dissolution that children dive into and remain suspended in when unfocused—a state of confusion that feels like floating, rising, or falling.
