This book talks about today, our asphyxiations, and our overwhelming need for air.

A rather stifling atmosphere is in the process of becoming our everyday reality. And yet, we dream more than ever of breathing: detoxifying the soil, the sky, relationships, daily life... Just taking a deep breath in and out. Maybe we only talk to breathe, to make it all breathable. Say the word "breathe," and the outside world comes running, hopeful, drawn, sucked in by the call of your lips.
