Left in the back of the garage for decades, today the bicycle could in effect reveal itself as the ideal tool for making the city a harmonious, egalitarian, and shared space.

Tracing the history of bicycles from the draisienne of the 19th century to prototypes of the 21st while endeavoring to discuss the economic, cultural, and social environment surrounding them as well as their technical aspects, Frédéric Hérán recounts an alternate history of urban transport with talent and humor.
