A funny, gritty satire that is to politics what the film 99 Francs was to advertising!

This is the story of a young woman, neither left nor right in political persuasion, who enters the Senate at the age of 25 and leaves fifteen years later with her fist raised and her feminist heart on her sleeve!

How do you talk about the world of politics, without rehashing journalistic investigations "from the inside"? By speaking intimately. By telling how it conditions you. Transforms you. How it leaves its mark. Hold your nose and take a deep dive into the trenches of old-school politics and the world to come. Part Paris Institute of Political Studies, part psychology, with humor that hits like a machete. An utterly subjective work of micro-sociology.
