Since 1991, France has conducted 115 military interventions to maintain its rank in the international pecking order. What will the consequences be?

In the era of armed globalization, France has become radicalized. Today, the French Army makes its presence felt in the streets, in health and safety administrations, and all over the world wherever the interests of such multinationals as Total, Bolloré, and their consorts can be found. Oppressive laws follow, giving more power to the government and the police, beyond any democratic control. In the name of the war on terrorism, some are tracked, hunted, abused in every possible way. Tabs are constantly kept on Muslims, people from poorer neighborhoods, union organizers, and environmental activists, while officers deliver menacing opinions...
