This book tells stories about amphibians and wetlands, in order to help us make Earth more habitable.

This ecological tale begins with a dream in which Olivier Remaud metamorphoses to follow Narsa, a Pyrenean frog who is leaving her native pond to escape climate change that is too violent and dangerous for her and her kin. The author thus takes the reader on a kind of aquatic road movie across time and spaces inhabited by all kinds of amphibian species, whose stories he shares. Water and aquatic systems are essential to us, and to all living beings, which is why we must defend amphibians.
